Dean's Office
Smith College
Northampton, Massachusetts

Dear Sirs:

It has been recently brought to our attention that a 1950 map of the Smith College campus indicated the existence of a "radio station" located between Prospect Street and Henshaw Avenue. We understand that, if there ever were an undergraduate broadcasting organization at Smith, it is now defunct. We would be interested to know why and when the Smith organization disbanded; might you write us some of the particulars, at your convenience?

We of the Yale Broadcasting Company, besides operating our radio outlets, enjoy traditional mixers with student broadcasters from some of the girls' schools, including Mount Holyoke College, Wellesley College, and Connecticut College for Women. Naturally some of our members feel that Smith is being slighted in the process. If you have knowledge of some Smith groups with some connection to broadcasting, speech, or drama, perhaps we might invite them to our studios and offices for an evening of broadcasting to Yale. Would you recommend some contacts of this sort?

Admittedly this matter is not of the first moment, but we would like to entertain, among our other guests, the proverbially personable Smith women. Any suggestions you might make would be most appreciated.

Sincerely,

Edward C. Marschner
Chairman
